JOURNEY's Neal Schon, Jonathan Cain And Former Singer Steve Perry Explore '80s Classic Frontiers 'InTheStudio'

Dallas, TX - FEBRUARY 27, 2013. North American syndicated Rock radio show InTheStudio: The Stories Behind History's Greatest Rock Bands celebrates the 30th anniversary of Journey's '80s blockbuster album Frontiers. Having come off their biggest album to date, Escape, Journey were firing on all cylinders and proved once again why they owned the rock/pop musical throne in 1983. Frontiers would produce four massive hits "Separate Ways", "Send Her My Love", "Faithfully" and "After the Fall" and go on to be a top seller too. Jonathan Cain boldly shares with InTheStudio host Redbeard what he believes Frontiers represented for the band.

"We were a rock and roll orchestra, and there are not many of them that can soar and play complex music. Frontiers was a fairly ambitious record musically, probably our most ambitious record."

Steve Perry remembers the effects that stardom and relentless touring had on the band's personal lives.

"There was so much division going on amongst the relationships of people and their wives. Two of the members were not going to make it with their wives. I could see divorce coming. It was tough. It was HARD."
